Admissions director possesses ‘gift of gab’

By Roxane Geraci-Rocha

Some would say Dick Pride has quite a gift of gab. The director of the Office of Admissions and Student Recruitment agrees with that premise, and adds that he enjoys talking as well.

Pride says it is with the help of his special "gift" that he has developed his office. The director said when he arrived the only recruitment tool was a schedule of classes with short paragraphs describing each class.

Today the office staff works to continually meet the needs of a growing university community.

Pride, who grew up in Rhode Island, received a bachelor's degree in history from Providence College in 1964, and a master's degree in medieval history from the University of Virginia in 1967.

How does a history major from the East end up as director of ASR in a southern suburb of Chicago? Well, it was a succession of events, says Pride.

From 1968 to 1970, Pride was in the U.S. Army. The law classes he took in college got him involved in Army legal work, and he served as a defense counselor and trial counselor.

The next stop for Pride was the University of New Orleans where he taught history courses. The first class he taught consisted of "208 souls sitting in front of him," he says with a chuckle. He also served as a departmental liaison with public and private schools in the New Orleans area—and this is where his interest in recruitment and admissions began.

"As the most junior member of the department, I would talk to prospective history majors, and I worked a little bit with admissions," says Pride.

In 1973, Pride accepted the assistant director of admissions position at Tulane University in New Orleans. He was also director of the Tulane University Scholastic Council.

He left Tulane in 1976 to become director of college programs and the college division at the American Institute for Foreign Studies where he developed an admissions, marketing and registration program. While with AIFS, Pride spent the summer of 1977 as resident dean at the University of London, Birkbeck College.

"It was fun, but it was exhausting," says Pride of his position at AIFS. "I was getting tired of missing birthdays and things like that."

Looking for an admissions director position, Pride came across the GSU ad in the Chronicle of Higher Education for just such a position. He chose GSU as his next career move in part because his wife's family lived in the area.

"I was intrigued by this place," says Pride of his decision to come here in 1979. And since that time, he has been working toward constant improvements in recruiting and admissions. He has developed many informational publications and recently worked on the development and implementation of the Online Transfer Credit System.

"Throughout all of this, my primary emphasis is the process of personalized initial contact with students," says Pride. One of his goals is to have a marketing plan that will enable him to study enrollment dynamics. That will give him a better understanding of the population served at GSU, he says.

Pride belongs to several professional organizations including the American Association of College Registrars and Admissions Officers where he currently serves as vice president of professional activity. He is also chairman and on the executive board of the Illinois Association of College Admissions Counselors. (Continued on page 4)

Secretary's choreography work has gone national

Dixie Butz, whose choreography work helped thrill audiences at past "Civil Service Day" programs, has gone national! She wrote, directed and choreographed 75 dancers for the national meeting of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars meeting.

Dixie, secretary in the Division of Communications, was put in charge of the entertainment for the April program at the Ramada O'Hare Inn by Lillian "Dolly" Mayer, president of the Illinois auxiliary. Dixie appropriately named the program "Dolly's Follies." The revue packed the grand ballroom at the hotel.

Proceeds from the 90-minute program will benefit cancer research.

GSU offering telecourses through three new sites

Governors State University is offering telecourses through three new sites, according to Dr. Joseph Correa, director of extended learning in the Office of Special Programs and Continuing Education.

Dr. Correa said three telecourses will be available at the library at Kankakee Community College, eight will be available from the Mokena Public Library and 10 will be available from the Lansing Public Library.

Increase in enrollment

The average student load increased for the second year to six credit hours.

While the on-campus day student enrollment decreased by 131 or 9.9 percent, the total portion of on-campus students has remained nearly constant at about 75 percent of the entire student body, which indicates on-campus students are taking more courses in the evening, Dr. Kryspin added.

For the seventh year, GSU's minority population remains at 20 percent.

Students enrolled exclusively in on-campus and/or home-study courses continue to represent about 25 percent of the student body. Home-study credit hours have decreased by 388 student credit-hours or 11.9 percent, while the number of students exclusively in home-study courses dropped by 26 percent.

Television programming subject of lecture series

Neal Sabin, credited with helping WPWR-TV Channel 50 become a successful independent television station in the Chicago market, will be the guest speaker May 16 as part of the "Distinguished Scholar-Statesman-Scientist-Artist Lecture Series" sponsored by the College of Arts and Sciences.

Sabin's 7:30 p.m. presentation "Being Successfully Independent in Television Programming" will be given in the Sherman Music Recital Hall.

As program director for Channel 50 since 1983, Sabin worked to develop the TV station from the ground up after its "Sportsvision" franchise went to cable television, and its Spanish-language programming ended a short time later.

Sabin's genius, his knowledge of television and his recognition of a younger generation of television viewers led him to develop a roster of syndicated and first-run programming that has made Channel 50 a team player in Chicago's television viewership market.

A graduate of Northwestern University, Sabin has also worked as executive producer for WIND Radio, and business manager/program director for Lee Communications of Chicago.
