Mental health

(Reprinted from National Association for Mental Health; 1800 N. Kent St., Arlington, Virginia 22209)

These are some of the characteristics of people with good mental health.

1. They feel comfortable about themselves.
   They are not bowled over by their own emotions — by their fears, anger, love, jealousy, guilt or worries.
   They can take life’s disappointments in their stride.
   They have a tolerant, easy-going attitude toward themselves as well as others; they can laugh at themselves.
   They neither underestimate nor overestimate their abilities.
   They can accept their own shortcomings.
   They have self-respect.
   They feel able to deal with most situations that come their way.
   They get satisfaction from the simple, everyday pleasures.

2. They feel right about other people.
   They are able to give love and to consider the interests of others.
   They have personal relationships that are satisfying and lasting.
   They expect to like and trust others, and take it for granted that others will like and trust them.
   They respect the many differences they find in people.
   They do not push people around, nor do they allow themselves to be pushed around.
   They can feel they are part of a group.
   They feel a sense of responsibility to their neighbors and fellow men.

They are able to meet the demands of life.
They do something about their problems as they arise.
They accept their responsibilities.
They shape their environment whenever possible; they adjust to it whenever necessary.
They plan ahead but do not fear the future.
They welcome new experiences and new ideas.
They make use of their natural capacities.
They set realistic goals for themselves.
They are able to think for themselves and make their own decisions.
They put their best effort into what they do, and get satisfaction out of doing it.

Many people, when they hear the term mental health think first of mental illness. But mental health is far more than merely the absence of mental illness.

Mental health is something all of us want for ourselves, whether we know it by name or not. When we speak of happiness, or peace of mind, or enjoyment, or satisfaction, we are usually talking about mental health.

Mental health has to do with everybody’s everyday life. It means the over-all way that people get along — in their families, at school, on the job, at play, with their associates, in their communities. It has to do with the way that each person harmonizes his desires, ambition, abilities, ideals, feelings and his conscience in order to meet the demands of life as he has to face them. It has to do with: 1. how you feel about yourself; 2. how you feel about other people; 3. how you are able to meet the demands of life.

There is no line that neatly divides the mentally healthy from the unhealthy. There are many different degrees of mental health. No one characteristic by itself can be taken as evidence of good mental health, nor the lack of any one as evidence of mental illness. And nobody has all the traits of good mental health all the time.

One way of describing mental health is to describe mentally healthy people. Just knowing what mental health is doesn’t mean you can go out and be mentally healthy, but knowing can help you to think straight about it.
