Meet the Challenge

It is time for university students to step up and meet the challenge.

The White House has launched the new Campus Champions of Change Challenge. The Challenge invites college and university students from across the country to demonstrate how their student-led project is improving their campus and/or local communities. Ideas previously developed and submitted to the Challenge include voter registration drives, sustainability projects, and community health initiatives. The main criterion for submission is how the student-led action improves the community.

The White House will select 15 finalists based on input from a panel of judges. The public will then have an opportunity to review the finalists and vote on the top five projects they think best embody the president's goal to win the future.

For more information and to submit an application, visit www.WhiteHouse.gov/CampusChallenge. Submissions are due by Friday, December 9.
