Generating Hope Named Program of the Year

A Generating Hope program that called attention to women’s experiences with incarceration recently received the 2019 Program of the Year Award at the recent GSU Student Leadership event.

“A Woman’s Journey Through the Criminal Justice System” was facilitated by graduate student, Falisa Byers, President of Generating Hope, which was founded in 2013 by students who had been impacted by incarceration.

Its mission is to increase accessibility to higher education, awareness around mass incarceration, and advocate for the dismantling of systemic barriers, while promoting support and healing.

If you would like additional information about this organization please contact Falisa Byers.
Taking Action to Remove Obstacles for Adult Learners
Spring 2019 All-Campus Symposium

A computer programmer looking for a career change wants to return to finish his bachelor’s degree 30 years after he earned his associates at a community college.

When the university he is applying to asks the busy father to produce transcripts from three schools he attended after high school, he becomes overwhelmed and wonders if it is worth the time, effort, and money required to navigate systems he hasn’t engaged in decades.

This is an example of a costly and frustrating scenario that frequently plays out across college and university campuses, according to Pam Tate, Chief National Partnerships Officer for the Strada Education Network who led a recent symposium on adult learning at Governors State University (GSU).

Rigid requirements —like the need to submit decades-old transcripts—become a wall between returning adult students and the higher education they seek. Even at universities like GSU, which was founded 50 years ago with the purpose of serving adult students, barriers exist. Today, nearly 50 percent of GSU’s students are age 25 or older.

Though universities must maintain high standards, some conditions may prove too difficult for people busy with jobs and families, said Tate, whose work at Strada helps non-profits establish national partnerships to help adults in the U.S. who either have no college at all or some college but no degree.

“These are adult learners and they don’t have time to waste,” she said.

During the spring symposium, Tate and attendees offered practical recommendations to remove barriers to adults wanting to return to school. The daylong event, attended by more than 100 GSU faculty, staff, and students, continued a series that started in the fall.

In October, Catherine Marienau, Professor and Coordinator of MA in Educating Adults Program at DePaul’s School for New Learning, discussed high-impact practices to effectively work with adult students, a fast growing segment on college campuses.

In Illinois alone, 1.8 million people over 25 years old have some college and no degree. Another 680,000 people have an associate’s degree but no bachelor’s degree.

“This is your potential market — 2.5 million people who could earn a bachelor’s degree at Governors State. That’s 30 percent of the state’s population,” said Tate.

During the symposium, Tate presented 10 benchmark practices ranging from adaptability to financing to transitioning students that help adult learners succeed at colleges and universities.

One of the success strategies centered on prior learning assessments (PLAs).

GSU students seeking an Interdisciplinary Studies (IDSS) degree receive credit for prior learning, though President Elaine P. Maimon suggested the tool be engaged more broadly in a return to Governors State’s founding principles to serve returning adults, now part of the New Majority, which also includes first-generation students, students of color, and veterans.

“In 1969 and the early 70s, we were way ahead of the rest of world in higher education in terms of competency based education. We just didn’t have the technology to support it. As we celebrate our 50th anniversary, it is time to honor our roots in innovation and make sure we are leaders in this important movement of the 21st century,” Dr. Maimon told symposium participants gathered on the stage of GSU’s Center for Performing Arts.

Before the symposium, a selected cross section of GSU faculty, staff and administrators—institutional responders—as well as students over the age of 25 took a Council for Adult and Experiential Learning (CAEL) survey to determine where GSU excelled in key areas and where the institution could improve.

Institutional representatives identified three areas where the university excels: student support services, such as academic and disability support; external partnerships, including community and social services for students; and student transitions in and out of the university as transferring or graduating students.

“There are so many great things going on here, and Governors State is a pioneer,” said Tate “We just want to make sure that things keep getting better.”
The base line data also indicated that GSU, like many universities including those with a long history of serving adult learners, have much more work to do.

On the problem of returning students being required to gather decades-old transcripts, Tate suggested the school take the lead by obtaining the records —and absorbing transcript fees—on behalf of the student.

“Now all those barriers have been removed and the institution takes on the responsibility,” she said.

Another suggestion was for academic advisors to engage students more holistically. In a model called Reconnect Café, advisors would be trained to discuss a myriad of topics such as social services and life goals to help students plan inside and outside the classroom. In this model, advisors encourage interaction with students instead of waiting for students to make appointments. Additionally, the advisors are available from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. to meet in a casual, café-like setting with coffee, bagels, and donuts.

To help students navigate a sometimes overwhelming college system, a GSU staff member suggested a Welcome Week for faculty and staff. Activities would include a scavenger hunt to help university workers find offices, service and program areas to better help students trying to navigate campus.

The spring symposium coincided with GSU’s budget planning, driven by the Planning and Budget Advisory Committee (PBAC) and the recently held Charrettes, public forums to gain to insight to help craft Strategy 2025.

During the symposium, President Maimon said the two planning processes dovetailed with ideas offered by Tate and participants.

“I am so uplifted by the work we’ve done here today. This is our blueprint, and some of the things we’re talking about are already in the works for next year,” she said.

Provost Beth Cada said the meeting energized her.

“Our best solutions come from the fact that we can sit together and we can do good problem solving.”
Anyone working to become a CPA has to be able to see whether things add up. For Milica Maras, Governors State University provided the ideal equation—a place where she could play volleyball and earn her Bachelor of Science in Accounting degree.

The combination proved such a good fit that Maras not only became GSU's first international athlete, she won awards as she earned a perfect GPA.

Raised in Serbia, Maras attended a specialized high school in Belgrade that focused on business and law where she was introduced to accounting. An avid athlete, she also wanted to continue playing volleyball when she headed to college, but that was an opportunity only available in the U.S., she said.

Maras came to the U.S. to study at a small college in Texas, which offered her a full scholarship.

Soon after arriving, she longed for a larger university and discovered GSU through a Google search for schools with both an accounting program and a NCAA or NAIA volleyball team.

The search netted great results, and the transition from a small college in the South to a regional institution was as smooth as her serve.

“I didn’t find it hard to blend in at GSU,” Maras said. “Everyone was interested in where I came from, and people would ask me to teach them a few Serbian words.” Maras lived at Prairie Place, sharing the kitchen with students from India and cooking food that intrigued the American students who stopped by to heat up a quick dinner.

“They would pop something in the microwave and say, ‘What are you making? That smells good,’” she laughed.
In exploring accounting classes, Maras encountered university Lecturer Michael Trendell, whose combination of textbook lessons with real-life examples in his auditing course helped Maras refine her professional goals. "He got me interested in auditing because he had many examples from his work life, and that really made sense to me," she said. "He also made it very clear what was important, which is really helpful when you’re an international student."

Maras also found a home on the women’s volleyball team, sporting number seven on her Jaguar jersey. Her prowess on the court, where she set records, was matched by her success in the classroom, where she earned a 4.0 GPA, leading to an NAIA-Daktronics Scholar-Athlete Award from the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, one of 14 selected out of approximately 2,300 NAIA women’s volleyball players.

Maras also was named to the Google Cloud Academic All-American NAIA Volleyball second team, drawing attention from the local news media.

While some students struggle to keep all the balls in the air, Maras readily shares her secret.

“It’s all about organization,” she said. “If you’re organized, you can do anything you want.”

Maras seems to manage a full schedule of classes and practice and still found time to serve as president of the International Culture Organization, which promotes diversity on campus.

“As an international student, it gives you a chance to be yourself and also an opportunity to learn about others,” she said.

During the club’s annual fashion show one year, she said, “I was wearing traditional Serbian dress with another Serbian girl, walking down the red carpet to traditional music. We started dancing to it, and pretty soon everyone was dancing, including President (Elaine) Maimon,” she said.

After graduation, Maras plans to work for a year, then head to graduate school before becoming a CPA, and heading back to Serbia.

“I want to work as a graduate assistant, hopefully at GSU,” she said. “I always tell people that this is a university that’s big enough to matter, but small enough to care about you,” she said.

Seems like a great balance for this future CPA.
Fifth Annual SALUTE Induction and Student Cording Ceremony

Governors State University celebrated 25 student veterans who have served their country and are now set to graduate college—many with advanced degrees—during the 5th Annual SALUTE and Military Connected Student Cording Ceremony.

“We have veterans represented in every single college and at every level throughout this university,” said an emotional Kevin Smith, Director of Veterans Resource Center at GSU, which has been named A Top Veteran Friendly School by “U.S. Veterans Magazine.”

Dan Wellman of the Illinois Department of Veterans Affairs encouraged the student veterans, seated before their loved ones on the stage of the Center for Performing Arts, to put their education to use in their communities.

“You succeeded here. … You’ve served your nation. Now, continue to serve others,” he said.

Wellman joined GSU VIPs and others to drape the soon-to-be graduates with red, white, and blue cords. High achieving veterans also received crisp, white stoles as part of an induction into SALUTE, the nation’s only honor society that recognizes the academic achievements of student veterans.

Explaining the meaning behind each letter in SALUTE, Brigadier General (ret.) Stephen K. Curda, Executive Director of Illinois Joining Forces, commended the students for exemplifying service, academics, leadership, unity, tribute, and excellence.

“I am humbled and honored to here,” he said. “On behalf of our 625,000 veterans in the state of Illinois. … thank you all.”

GSU President Elaine P. Maimon ended the ceremony by recognizing student veterans' leadership on campus.

“You do so much to show an example for our students… You bring a commitment to the public good, and I want to thank you. I want to congratulate you. I want to salute you.”
Student Life recently celebrated student and faculty achievement at the Student Leadership Awards ceremony. Winners included Athletes of the year, Milica Maras and John Orowick; Outstanding Faculty, Dr. Joi Patterson; Outstanding Student Organization, Student Occupational Therapy Association; Outstanding Graduate Students, David Cobb, Nechawn Johnson, and Sarah Wiora; Freshman of the Year, Brittnay Spears; Excellence in Marketing, Student Education Association; Outstanding Undergraduate Student, Jamaal Webster; Program of the Year, A Woman's Journey Through the Criminal Justice System - Generating Hope; Outstanding Advisor of the Year, Dr. Megan McCaffrey (SEA); Elaine P. Maimon Award, Alexandra Wurz (Student Occupational Therapy Association).

Male Success Initiative Students Attend Black and Latino Male Summit

On Saturday, April 20, four MSI participants attended the Black and Latino Male Summit held at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. This year's summit, hosted by the La Casa Cultural Latina and the Bruce Nesbitt African American Cultural Center, featured a keynote address by Dr. Miguel Saucedo. There were also a plethora of breakout sessions, some of which were facilitated by students.

Aside from getting great information and meeting other students, the MSI attendees were impressed by how students coordinated the whole conference from start to finish.

"It's amazing what we can do as students," said Aaron West. "Oftentimes we feel like we have to just show up, and don't realize that we can also be in charge. This was an eye-opening experience to go back to GSU and actually make some things happen."

Other attendees included GSU students Denzel Vance-Cousin, German Cutz, and Kyle LeGrone.

Family Development Center Roof Repaired Using Helicopter

On May 4, Facilities Development and Management (FDM) and contractor, McAuley Mechanical, enlisted a helicopter to replace 11 out of 22 units on the Family Development Center roof.

A four-phase plan to upgrade the FDM systems began last year with the replacement of the heating system's boilers, pumps, and piping. The upgrades are expected to be completed in 2020 with the replacement of the remaining 11 roofing units.

Checkmate: Strategic Students Start Chess Club on Campus

On any given day, you might catch Governors State University Biology sophomore, Nicholas Parente, and IDSS senior, Keyston Franklin, playing chess in the GSU cafeteria. To passers-by, their game may appear tranquil, but when asked to describe it, the students compared the match to a "rollercoaster."
For them, the excitement of the game lies in its variability. Parente says, “The pieces must always move in the same assigned directions, but it's possible to have a million different outcomes.”

That's what makes chess an excellent tool for developing critical thinking and problem-solving skills.

The students’ appreciation for chess inspired them to establish a campus Chess Club, which meets casually every other Friday from 3-5 p.m. in the cafeteria. Often they find passers-by want to spontaneously join in the game of strategy.

What they have discovered is that many Jaguars enjoyed chess at one point in their lives, but stopped playing for one reason or another.

The Chess Club seeks to reignite that passion and foster a sense of community on campus.

To join, search on the Jaguar Connection for Chess Club, or drop by the cafeteria on a Friday afternoon for a silent, but thrilling game of chess.
