COURSE TITLE: The Adolescent Substance Abuser: School, Family, Treatment and Prevention Strategies

COURSE NUMBER: ADDS 526

CREDIT HOURS: 3 Graduate or Undergraduate Credit Hours

INSTRUCTOR: Peter Palanca - (708) 534-4913

CATALOG DESCRIPTION:

Examines adolescent substance abuse and involvement of the school and family in prevention, intervention, and treatment.

RATIONALE:

Through its effects on the physiological, psychological, and social development of adolescents, substance use and abuse affects the ecology of the school and family. This course is designed to help professionals identify the effects of substance abuse on adolescents and to develop strategies for prevention, intervention and treatment in educational and familial settings.

INTENDED AUDIENCE:

Graduate students, professionals, and community members who are or will be working with adolescents should find this course useful in designing and implementing effective prevention, intervention, and treatment programs.

OBJECTIVES:

Upon completion of this course, students should be able to:

1. differentiate among various types of adolescent substance use and abuse.
2. identify risk factors associated with adolescent substance abuse.
3. compare the roles of family, peers, schools and professional services in adolescent substance abuse prevention and treatment.
4. assess the effects of substance abuse on adolescent biological, psychological and social development.
5. evaluate school-based prevention programs.
6. differentiate prevention, intervention, and treatment programs and identify at least two issues related to each type of program.
7. describe denial and defense mechanisms used adolescent substance abusers, their families, and others.
8. describe components of Student Assistance Programs.
