Maimon Kicks Off Academic Year With Convocation

By Steve Schering

Standing at the same podium she did eight months earlier as GSU’s first presidential finalist, Dr. Elaine Maimon gave her first Convocation Speech since becoming GSU President.

Her first state of GSU address took place September 11 in the Sherman Recital Hall. After presenting Ron McDavitt with the Dr. Gerald C. Baymore Endowed Distinguished Service Award, Maimon took time to reflect on the six-year anniversary of the terrorist attacks of 2001.

“Convocation is traditional to opening up the academic year, but this year we come together on a date that resonates in all our hearts,” Maimon said, before leading in a moment of silence. “I was CEO of the west campus at Arizona State University and we decided to stay open and hold classes.

“We intended to provide a safe place for our staff and students. We were on campus engaged in education.”

Maimon also cited the recent success of registering students to vote. At the Welcome Days event the school managed to register 77 new voters in a two-day span. The school will continue to register new voters up until election time.

“Spreading the Word on Scholarships

With gas and milk at more than $3.00 a gallon, wouldn’t it be nice if you could get some help with your college tuition?

Because times have changed so drastically, many people are focusing on going back to school. When you walk in many college classrooms, you find a lot of people 30 and over returning to try and make a difference.

Most of the jobs that are available to us require more of an educational edge than we currently possess. Here at GSU there are close to 6,000 students enrolled. Each semester, some 2,750 students apply for some type of financial aid.

According to David Weinberger, assistant director of the Financial Aid Department, there are several avenues of financial assistance available for GSU students.

“There are many scholarships and tuition waivers available. Many of the scholarships for this semester have already been awarded, but now is the time to apply for next semester’s,” said Sherrie Sanderson, a Business/Administrative Associate at GSU.

The Financial Aid office is trying to get the word out about the assistance that is available. Earlier this year a scholarship booklet was mailed to all GSU students, with a complete listing of all scholarships available, along with their specific deadlines.

As part of the criteria, in many cases, students are asked to submit an essay giving information about their projected career.

That seems to be as easy as it gets. What could be better than telling people what you intend to do for society, with the knowledge you have gained at GSU?

It seems that even with the booklet many students don’t have the information they need.

“We often take it for granted that everyone is aware, but as we can see they’re not,” said Kelly Boike, who is working on her bachelors degree in business management.

“Never knew scholarships existed here,” said Kelly Boike, who is working on her bachelors degree in business management.

“Never knew anything existed for grad students,” Toomey said.

Each dean, for every major study has the most updated material needed for students to apply.

Information is also available at Financial Aid. Always remember, ‘Financial Aid is here to help the students,' Weinberger said.
GSU Questions You

No doubt the ‘Why Not?’ posters and flyers have caught your attention while walking through campus. If you are asking yourself the question ‘Why?’ then look no further than GSU’s new website at www.govst.edu/whynot.

While Governors State University President Dr. Elaine Maimon was concluding her Convocation Speech on September 11, she revealed what the ‘Why Not?’ campaign is all about.

"George Bernard Shaw originated the famous quotation adopted by Bobby Kennedy,” Maimon said. “Shaw wrote: ‘You see things and you say, ‘Why?’ But I dream of things that never were, and I say, ‘Why not’.”

“Some of us remember that Robert Kennedy ended every stump speech with his version of that quotation: ‘Some men see things as they are and ask, ‘Why?’ I dream of things as they never were and ask, ‘Why not?’’”

Robert Kennedy died in 1968. Governors State University was founded one year later in 1969, based on this ‘Why not?’ spirit.

The ‘Why Not?’ website will allow students, faculty, alumni or anyone else interested to state a problem, issue or concern about GSU that needs improvement. Then you can list your own solution to the problem.

A committee that works on the website will then forward each message to its proper destination for a response. GSU will be giving out prizes to those who submit a constructive suggestion. No prizes will be given out for complaints without a suggestion, however. There will also be one ‘big prize’ given away each semester for the best idea.

“Is everyone’s chance to participate actively in suggesting ideas to bust bureaucracy, improve all features of what we do, and make GSU a truly student-centered institution” Maimon said.”

GSU Library Hosts Art Show and Booksale

The Friends of the GSU Library is sponsoring an art show and book sale on September 19, beginning at 4 p.m. Members of Friends of the Library will get first chance to purchase books from 4-5 p.m. The general public will be able to shop the sale from 5-6 p.m. The donated books will range in price from 50 cents to $10.

The art show will feature the work of Country Club Hills resident Faye Zalecki. Zalecki graduated from The School of the Art Institute of Chicago in 1953 with a BAE degree.

Since then Zalecki has worked in several area art studios, including Fuller Smith Studios, Fuller Smith & Ross Agency, the University of Chicago Printing Department and the Portland Cement Association.

After working 40 years in the advertising industry Zalecki retired. After her husband’s death in 1996, she began to design new artwork using a variety of computer software, archive quality papers and permanent ink.

Her work has been showcased at Tall Grass Arts Association in Park Forest, White Street Gallery in Franklin and The Art House in Palos Heights.
Colleges Grads Have Social Advantages

By Megan Kaldis

(U-Wire) A college degree has more benefits than just a higher wage for graduates; it also provides a host of societal benefits and according to a report released Thursday.

The "Education Pays Report" was written by Sandy Baum and Jennifer Ma for the College Board, a nonprofit organization with the mission "to connect students to college success and opportunity," according to its Web site. The report uses data from the U.S. Department of Education, the U.S. Census Bureau and surveys by other higher education groups.

The report lists a variety of societal benefits for higher education including increased tax revenue, more volunteerism and healthier lifestyles. Noting these advantages, the report encourages closing the gaps preventing higher education from reaching more people.

"College exposes you to many kinds of people and ideas in and out of the classroom, which dispels your fears about other's ideas and makes you more sure about your own ideas," said Suzanne Morse, president of Pew Partnership for Civic Change.

Morse also said she believes those with a college degree volunteer more because they have jobs that allow them the time, and they usually know more people in the community to call to get involved.

"People without a degree have to work more jobs to just make ends meet," Morse said.

The report showed that 43 percent of bachelor's degree recipients said they volunteered in 2006. Fewer than 20 percent of high school graduates report volunteering and do so for a median of 52 hours.

Those with a college degree are less likely to smoke than those without the degree.

According to the report, 10 percent of those over age 25 with at least a bachelor's degree smoke, compared to 25 percent of those whose educations ended in high school.

Those who have a degree know the health risks or are influenced by parents and peers who do not smoke, Morse said.

The report also acknowledged that differences in family background and other factors have an effect on educational attainment.

Getting a college education is an outcome of the way people were raised, said Robert Crosse, a UT sociology associate professor.

A person's background and socio-economic status cannot be excluded as factors in the benefits he or she receives from a college degree, he said.

"People with a college degree come from a better background, are efficacious and usually have higher IQs," Crosse said.

Male, low-income, black, Hispanic and rural students are all less likely to attend college. Investments into increasing education levels for these groups deliver "a high rate of return for society," the report said.

Lenders Take Their Lumps From Student-Aid Legislation

By Albert Sun

(U-Wire) Thanks to Congress' recent student-aid legislation, the gravy train may be coming to an end for student-loan providers.

Last week, both houses of Congress passed a comprehensive student-aid bill that considerably raises the interest rate on federal loans.

As part of the bill, loan providers will lose an estimated $20 billion worth of subsidies, a move from Congress partly in response to what critics have called a greedy student loan industry.

New York Attorney General Andrew Cuomo announced an investigation into improper relationships between the aid legislation - student-loan companies.

"That climate contributed to greater bipartisan support for cutting these subsidies," he added.

The federal subsidy system - which guarantees a minimum rate of return and repays the lender in case of student defaults - was originally designed to encourage companies to provide loans to students with no credit history.

Swarthout argued, however, that it was ultimately used by lending companies to make far more profit than was intended.

"This is an industry that has a hard time distinguishing between taxpayer dollars and their own profits," he said.

Business and Public Policy professor Betsey Stevenson said that, with this bill, Congress is doing away with a government regulation that creates waste.

"If it was a competitive industry, what they would do is lower their prices," Stevenson said, "but it's a government-regulated one."

Daily Orange (Syracuse)

Syracuse & Universal Partner for Movie Screenings

The intent at Syracuse calls for a screening of a yet-to-be-released film every month at Palace Theater, 2384 James St. Admission will be free and open to SU students only.

The DVD release of summer hit "Knocked Up" on Sept. 25 will also banner for National "Knocked Up" Day. Jones will help celebrate this auspicious day by giving away DVDs and other promotional items at a yet-to-be-announced local bar, which will also carry drink specials throughout the night.

Jones said "Knocked Up" is a perfect example of what Universal is trying to accomplish.

"It was a low-budget film with very little initial hype," Jones said. "But because Universal showed students the film ahead of time through Campus U and because students liked it so much and promoted it well, the film ended up being one of the huge successes of the summer."

On Sept. 26, the Palace Theater will show the critically acclaimed "The Kingdom," starring Jamie Foxx and Jennifer Garner, days before its opening release. Other flicks slated for this semester include "Elizabeth: The Golden Age," George Clooney’s sports comedy "Leatherheads" and Ridley Scott’s "American Gangster," starring Denzel Washington and Russell Crowe.

Television, radio and film majors are particularly excited at the prospective plan. Many said they believe the viewings will help them with their critical skills in their particular areas of interest.

"Watching movies earlier than their release date allows us as students to think for ourselves and not be influenced by what someone like Roger Ebert has to say," said freshman TRF major Michael Morse.

"It certainly allows us to examine a piece independently and then see later how we measure up to the more experienced reviewers," Morse said.

Robert Thompson, director of the Bleier Center for Television and Popular Culture at SU, said he believes movie companies and their marketing and advertising divisions see college students as promotions outlets.

"With the idea of advanced screenings — students are insiders," he said.

"If you show a sneak preview to a bunch of 65 year olds, they might like it, and they might tell some of their friends in the pinochle club," Thompson said. "However, students will be talking about it on Facebook, MySpace, etc. Today, the average college student has become a major communication device."

For the latest information on show times and screenings of Universal films throughout the school year, students can join the "Universal Pictures at SU" Facebook group.
Across the Universe: An Audio/Visual Triumph

By John Conrad
Associate Editor

"Is there anybody going to listen to my story, all about a girl who came to stay?"

This line, from the song Girl, marks the beginning of Across the Universe, a musical adventure into the fantastic. Across the Universe is a story of love, war, peace, friendship, although set in the 60's, is still relevant in today.

The story involves a dockworker from Liverpool named Jude traveling to America to meet his estranged father. After arriving stateside, Jude befriends Max, a college drop out, and the two become fast friends. Soon after this Jude is introduced to Max's sister Lucy, and they fall in love.

At the brink of rebirth, a second chance to realize university goals. Change is inevitable, and it carries the winds of possibility. As the student senate, specifically Karen Mayo, the Chair of the student senate programming committee, this will be a class act and should not be missed by any student at GSU. Come see what your friends are doing in school.

Good afternoon everyone. This is a great time to speak in convocation. Especially since GSU is on the brink of rebirth, a second chance to realize university goals. Change is inevitable, and it carries the winds of ideas. Ideas can turn to dust or magic. I have a hunch we will see a lot of magic around this university. I think the banners are the introduction to the magic. Every banner explains who we are and what we can do with a new sense of purpose. Change comes bearing gifts. In that case I am expecting a field of flowers, and there is every indication that GSU will blossom.

I would like to ask the student senate will put on a production in Engbertson Hall on the Friday afternoon [November 2] of the installation. The presentation will include exemplary performance of various students from all colleges in the universitites. This production will be hosted by the student senate, specifically Karen Mayo, the Chair of the student senate programming committee. This will be a class act and should not be missed by any student at GSU. Come see what your friends are doing in school.
