ACT I Through the windows of the Eisenstein home floats the serenade of Alfred, a tenor still in love with his old flame Rosalinde, now the wife of Gabriel von Eisenstein. Adele, a chambermaid, saunters in reading an invitation to a masked ball; Rosalinde, bedeviled by a headache and believing she has heard Alfred’s voice, enters but finds only Adele. The maid asks for the evening off to visit a “sick aunt,” a plea her mistress dismisses. Alfred steps into the room and begins to woo Rosalinde, who resists his verbal blandishments but melts on hearing his high A. The suitor leaves as Eisenstein and his lawyer, Blind, arrive from a session in court: Eisenstein has been sentenced to a fortnight in jail for a civil offense. No sooner does he dismiss the incompetent advocate than his friend Falke comes to invite Eisenstein to a masquerade, suggesting he bring along his repeater stop-watch, which charms all the ladies, so he can accumulate pleasant memories to sustain him during his confinement in jail. Rosalinde joins Adele in a bittersweet farewell to Eisenstein before he goes off to prison, dressed up, to his wife’s surprise, in full evening attire. Sending Adele to her “aunt,” Rosalinde receives the ardent Alfred. Their tête-à-tête is interrupted by the warden Frank, who mistakes Alfred for the man he has come to arrest. Rosalinde persuades Alfred to save her name by posing as her husband, and Frank carts him off to jail.

ACT II In an antechamber at the palace of Prince Orlofsky, the nobleman’s guests, Adele and her cousin Ida among them, await the arrival of their host. Orlofsky enters, quite bored—even with Falke’s promise of a comedy of errors. The prince proclaims his guests free to do anything that suits their fancy—“Chacun a son gout.” Adele, dressed in one of Rosalinde’s most elegant gowns, laughs off Eisenstein’s suggestion that she resembles his wife’s chambermaid. Frank enters, and Rosalinde, also invited by Falke, arrives disguised as a temperamental Hungarian countess; she is soon wooed by her own reeling husband, whose pocket watch she steals to hold as proof of his philandering. Rosalinde agrees to sing a song about her “native” land, a spirited czardas, after which the guests move on to a magnificent dining area to toast the joys of wine, good fellowship and love. Champagne flows, and the guests dance wildly until dawn. When the clock strikes six, Eisenstein staggers off to keep his appointment at the jail.

ACT III Moments later at the prison, Frosch, a drunken jailer, tries to keep order among the inmates, who are unable to sleep because of Alfred’s singing. Frank arrives, still giddy with champagne, followed shortly by Ida and Adele, who, thinking him a theatrical agent, believes he might further her stage aspirations. Frank, hearing someone at the door, hides the girls in a cell and then admits Eisenstein, who has come to begin his sentence. The new prisoner is surprised to learn his cell is already occupied by a man who claims to be Eisenstein and who was found supping with Rosalinde; to obtain an explanation from the impostor, Eisenstein snatches a legal robe and wig from his astonished lawyer. No sooner is he disguised than Rosalinde arrives to secure Alfred’s release and press divorce charges against her errant husband. With her would-be paramour, she confides her flirtation to the “lawyer.” Enraged, Eisenstein removes his disguise and accuses his wife of promiscuity, at which Rosalinde whips forth the watch she took from him at the ball. Orlofsky and his guests arrive to celebrate the reconciliation of Rosalinde and Eisenstein, singing a final toast as Eisenstein is taken away.

Mr. Lalov was born in Telesh, Bulgaria in June 1958. His father, "Lalo," a doctor, and his mother, Stoiyanka, an elementary school teacher and Bulgarian folk singer, were educated patrons of the arts. When the elder Mr. Lalov died, Giorgio was only nine years old, but because he was an excellent student, he had the good fortune to be accepted at an elite boarding school in the capital city of Bulgaria, where all the lessons were taught in French. When he graduated from high school in 1976, he was fluent in French and English. That fall he entered the Bulgarian National Academy of Music and went on tour throughout Italy with a choir from the university. While in Milan, he auditioned for the famous International School for Young Opera Singers at La Scala, was accepted and went on to make his operatic debut at La Scala at the age of 25. After living in Italy for a short time, Mr. Lalov became fluent in Italian. In 1986, while on tour with an opera company in France, he met Yves Josse, a former ballet dancer who was booking opera and ballet tours. They became business partners. Mr. Lalov had many resources: He spoke several languages, was able organize the creation of sets and costumes in Bulgaria and put together an excellent orchestra and chorus. He also knew many fine opera singers in Bulgaria, central Europe, and the United States. By 1988, Messrs. Josse and Lalov were collaborating on what was to become the most successful opera touring company in Europe. At the time of Mr. Josse's death in 1995, Teatro Lirico had presented over 250 performances a season throughout Europe. In 1990, Mr. Lalov established the Sofia Symphony Orchestra and Chorus. Winter 2000 marked Teatro's first major American tour. The revivals from the 10 consecutive tours Teatro Lirico D'Europa has completed thus far in the United States speak for the high quality and consistency of the company. The fact that the company is able to tour with many different productions is an indication of Mr. Lalov's hard work, excellent organizational skills and unfailing dedication to the art of opera. In spring 2009, the impresario became the artistic director of Baltimore Opera Theatre. The new company will present full-scale productions of opera at Baltimore's famous Hippodrome Theatre, featuring European and American singers and musicians as well as local talent.

"I'm not alone in hoping that Giorgio Lalov, the talented opera singer turned creator of Teatro Lirico D'Europa stays happy and healthy and continues to bring us such magnificent productions. We can only hope to see more from this company in years to come."

THE WALTZ KING AND HIS FLEDERMAUS

By Mary Jane Phillips-Matz

Bubbling with joy and wit and bursting with just plain fun, operetta is the perfect entertainment, and Johann Strauss's DIE FLEDERMAUS is the perfect operetta.

Strauss (1825-1899), who became a celebrity and was called The Waltz King, was famous for his romantic appearance, dark, wavy hair and expressive eyes. It is quite natural that DIE FLEDERMAUS, which had its world premiere on April 5, 1874, quickly won audiences. Strauss came to his art naturally, for he and his father were responsible for creating the passion for waltzes and their sweeping "ONE-two-three, ONE-two-three" rhythms. We cannot imagine operetta without them.

The Magic of DIE FLEDERMAUS

With the waltz in his heart, then, Strauss brought to life the unforgettable characters of DIE FLEDERMAUS: the beautiful Rosalind and Eisenstein, her hapless husband, Adele, her social-climbing maid, and Falke, her husband's friend. Not surprisingly, they — and a colorful assortment of guests — all turn up in Act II at the costume ball, which is hosted by the rich and eccentric Prince Orlofsky. King Champagne rules the evening. And the costumes! Rosalinde comes dressed as a Hungarian countess. Eisenstein, not recognizing her after having drunk too much, flirts with her. Falke is in costume as a bat — the bat that gives the operetta its title, while Adele poses as a lady, wearing a gown "borrowed" from Rosalinde's closet. This, then, is the sparkling costume ball in DIE FLEDERMAUS. Left out of the fun is Rosalinde's former lover, an opera singer who turns up unexpectedly, courts her, and ends up in jail, where the whole cast comes together in Act III. All conflicts are reconciled in the end, when love and friendship rule. Like most operettas, DIE FLEDERMAUS has its roots in everyday life. It shows a cross-section of the society of the time and demonstrates universal truths: Everyone loves to have fun; husbands and wives can argue and cheat a bit; flirting is acceptable, if it is all in fun; humor saves the day, at least at costume balls; and everyone — even a maid — can dress up in costume and dance. In fact, when Strauss and his orchestra played at festive events such as the ball he depicted, many people attended in disguise, just as in this operetta.

The Strauss Family and Their Music

All of this pleasure is a gift to us from the Strauss family of Vienna: violinists, bandleaders and composers. In two generations, the Strausses grew from humble beginnings as tavern musicians and common fiddlers to being welcomed in the most respectable concert halls and finest theatres. They also gained recognition as serious composers and were very much a part of a tradition, because the earliest dances resembling waltzes had become popular in Vienna in the early 1700's, played by wandering four-man bands. Not until 1825 was the name waltz applied to that music. Operetta emerged at this same time, with the Strauss family and their operettas known all over Europe and abroad.
